Non-contractual informational guide - synthetic retrieval distractor

Purpose of this guide

This guide explains common terms across the Nova synthetic demo products. It is informational and is not part of any contract. Contract-specific answers must come from the applicable contractual documents.

What is an annual limit?

An annual limit is the maximum amount payable for a benefit during a policy year. The actual amount depends on the contract.

What is an effective date?

An effective date is the date from which cover applies. The actual date is shown in the policy documents.

What is a deductible?

A deductible is the portion of an eligible loss borne by the insured. Different benefits may use different deductibles.

What is an ISIN?

An International Securities Identification Number is an identifier used for securities and investment funds. Fund documentation may use an ISIN to distinguish instruments with similar names.

What is a management fee?

A management fee is a recurring charge expressed as a percentage. This guide deliberately contains no fund-specific rates.

How should amendments be read?

An endorsement or amendment can replace a specific value in an earlier document from a stated effective date. The later document should not be ignored merely because an earlier document is more similar to the wording of the question.

Synthetic document created solely for the PolicyLens RAG prototype. It does not describe a real person, policy, product or insurer.
